Today, it is very easy to take pictures. But how about in the old days? Around the year 1800, only a few people knew how to take photographs. Cameras in those days were large, heavy, expensive, and difficult to use. So, most people who took photographs were professional photographers. How did things change? In 1900, a man named George Eastman made a small camera. The new camera was so easy to use that almost anyone could take pictures with it. Eastman called his new camera the Kodak Brownie. Kodak Brownies were not expensive either. You only had to pay one dollar for one. Soon thousands of people were buying Kodak Brownies and taking pictures.
