When you know something wonderful, you want to talk about it. But if you can't use words, what do you do? You may try using your body like bees.

Bees talk. But their language has no words. What do they do? The worker bee looks for food. The food is called nectar. It comes from flowers. The bee finds flowers. It eats some nectar and takes some home.

The bee gives the nectar to others so they can work. They want more. How can the bee tell them where it came from? It can't use words. So it uses its body. It dances. The dance tells the bees which way to go. It tells them how far.

Soon the bees understand the information. They soon leave their home and fly to the flowers to get their food.

Hello, everyone. My name is Sarah Roberts, and I'll be your teacher for this summer course, Culture and Communication. We are going to study together for four weeks this summer. Nice to meet you.

First, please look at the paper on your desk. You should all have one now, I think. This course will be on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10:15 to 11:50. We will meet in this room for the first half of the course, but we will use Research Room 405 for the last two weeks.

This is the textbook for the course, "Culture and Language". I'm sorry but the books for you haven't arrived yet. The books will be at the bookstore the day after tomorrow. So, remember to buy one for yourself. Please look again at your course paper. During this course, you will have tests, small quizzes, one research project and classroom activities. At the end of this course, with the results of your work, we will decide your grade. Do you have any questions? OK. Let's start.
